FADS OF THE MOMENT

Ranking in importance as well as in variety, with the fashions of the day, are the fads that accompany them—the fads that decide that you shall carry a small coin purse this season instead of innumerable danglers; that dictate the precise angle at which your veil will be worn, or the exact moment of the day when your coat must be buttoned instead of flyaway, as with nine-tenths of the shoppers nowadays.

It is only the woman on the inside, however, who seems to know of these things, at least for several months after they have been regulations of the Paris world. Yet one is regarded as quite "out of it" who all unconsciously slips into an error that a year ago or a season ago would have been the only possible thing to do.

Glove fads are perhaps more outlandish than any others, and are more given to change. Just now gloves are being worn very little, never after 6 o'clock. This does not mean that millady has an economical bent—certainly not. Moreover, were one to invade her glove cases one probably would find in them the same array that she required when each new party required a new pair of gloves, there are a few persons in the world who are still haughty about wearing cleaned gloves. She must have handsome gloves and she must likewise carry them, but after 6 o'clock she positively must never wear them. At dinners, the theatre or the opera one does not see one woman in ten wearing gloves.

In consequence millady pays more attention than ever to her hands. A strenuous course of massage, cold creaming and bleaching is gone thru daily, and the nails likewise are submitted to special treatment so that they will be as pink and as polished as the most exacting crank could wish. For the latter, a new fad has taken hold of the feminine world. The nails are varnished over with a brilliant glaze that is warranted to last—and really does—for a week or longer. It is of a very deep pink. Applied with a brush, the liquid does not adhere to anything but the nail, so that it is a little blushed on the finger it does not matter.

WALKING COSTUME OF BROADCLOTH TRIMMED WITH MOIRE AND LACE.

Broadcloth in a fashionable shade was utilized in designing the stylish afternoon gown shown here. The collar, cuffs and waistcoat were of gullpure lace combined with net. The wide girdle, with the rosette at the left, was of moire ribbon. Although the skirt was slashed and drawn up to make a wide opening in the front, this was filled in with a deep flounce of plaited moire silk.

Must Display Jewels

The hands made up, the next question regards the jewels that must be worn to show off their beauty. Some women persist in the habit of loading their fingers down with rings of every style, four or five on a single finger, and occasionally one on the thumb. As a rule, every possible variety of jewel is seen on the hand of a woman who cares for all this ornamentation. If she will be in perfect taste, however, she will wear the number both of rings and of the stones this season. It is now considered more artistic to wear only two or three rings, and these containing not more than two kinds of stones. Stones match the costume as far as possible—sapphires with a blue gown, pearls with black, although any jewel shows off with equal advantage with that somber hue; emeralds, with the popular shades of green, etc. The latter gem is the season's rage, and is frequently used in conjunction with pearls, but only where the emerald is of unusually large size; otherwise a simpler setting is preferred.

Perhaps you have noticed on the little finger of the gloveless right hand a tiny ring, attached to which is a chain or a tiny clasp or clasp. This is intended to hold a filmy lace handkerchief. Some of these rings and holders are elaborately jeweled, but if preferred they may be of the plainest gold. They are pretty and coquettish looking and likewise draw attention to the hands, which is one way of looking at it when you have labored long and ardently to make them, soft and smooth.

The banishing of evening gloves does not mean that long gloves are not being worn. The afternoon frocks and many of the tailored suits are made with elbow or three quarter length sleeves. However, if one would be ultra smart, one does not wear elbow gloves in white; any other pale shade finds preference over that.
